The podcast returns after its close season lay off and despite being promised a very special guest you are stuck with boring old Eddie and boring old Harry for company. Together they take a look back over the events of the past few weeks. They talk about transfer rumours, the BBC's response to the fan complaints regarding the accusation of "sectarianism", Reid's departure and the impact Craig Whyte is having upon the media. They finish with a discussion on whether or not Kayal should get a new contract and just how much that contract should be worth and Eddie's voice just about manages to last until the end of the pod.
