Michael Dolan joins Eddie for a chat immediately after the 1-1 draw against Udinese. They discuss the team performance and that of the individuals selected to play. They review some of the interesting decisions made by the ref and have a difference of opinion over the penalty awarded in the final ten minutes of the match. Next they discuss the recent protest by the Green

Brigade regarding the legislation currently making its way through the Scottish parliament. The need for this legislation is discussed and the potential impact upon football in Scotland should it be introduced. Finally they look ahead to the match at Tynecastle and try to second guess just how many fans will be lifted by an over eager police force.
